The Dedalus Foundation Scholarship

THE PROGRAM

The Dedalus Foundation Scholarships are administered by the Department of Education of the City of New York. The Foundation generously will provide up to 7 fine arts scholarships of $2,000 each to graduating seniors who intend to further their studies in fine arts or art history at an accredited college, university, or art school. The scholarship money must be used for school expenses.

The Dedalus Foundation, founded by the artist Robert Motherwell, fosters public understanding of modern art and modernism by facilitating and supporting scholarly research, education, publications, exhibitions, and museum collections in this field. The Foundation has an active grants program through which it supports various educational and museum programs. It awards three kinds of individual annual fellowships: doctoral dissertation fellowships in art history, senior fellowships in art history and criticism, and master of fine arts fellowships in painting and sculpture.

Robert Motherwell, a leading spokesman of the Abstract Expressionist artists, was profoundly concerned with the role that education played in the arts. Starting in the 1940s, he lectured widely at museums and schools. In 1944, he founded the Documents of Modern Art, a series of books that made the then-unfamiliar writings of the great early modernists (and of the critics who supported them) available to an English-speaking audience. For many years, Motherwell taught at Hunter College and throughout his life was actively involved with various aspects of art education.
