A message from the Executive Director, Charter School Office

Dear New Yorker,

This directory provides you with the latest information on the growing number of charter schools in New York City. It is intended as a resource for parents, grandparents and other guardians as you search for the school that best meets your child's needs.

Charter schools are public schools—they are free and open to all students. If more students apply to a charter school than it has room for, then a lottery is held to determine which students get in.

Good luck as you apply for one of the limited number of spots at the 99 charter schools in the city. Please know that we are working hard to meet your demand for even more high-quality charter school options in the future.

Sincerely,

Introduction

This directory provides information for parents/guardians who are considering enrolling their school-age children in a New York City public charter school. You will find helpful information on public charter schools, how they operate, and how you can enroll your children. You will also find profiles of the 99 New York City public charter schools currently operating in all five boroughs.

General Information about Charter Schools

What is a charter school?

- Charter schools are public schools that operate independently according to the terms of a five-year performance contract, or “charter.”
- Charter schools are free and open to all students: they do not charge tuition.
- All charter schools commit to meeting or exceeding specific goals for academic performance.
- Charter schools are reviewed annually by their “authorizers” (state-sanctioned bodies with the power to create or renew charter schools).
- Upon meeting or exceeding agreed-upon academic and operational goals, a charter school can be granted a renewal for up to five more years by its authorizer. This process repeats itself in five-year cycles.

How are charter schools similar to other public schools?

- Charter schools are open to all NYC students regardless of ability or income level.
- Charter schools are publicly-funded and must administer all City and State exams.
- Charter schools must meet or exceed state and federal academic performance standards.
- Charters must comply with federal and state teacher certification requirements.
- Like all publicly-funded schools, charter schools must meet New York State Board of Regents requirements and state laws for health, safety, and student assessment.
- Charter schools cannot discriminate in their admissions policies on any basis (ethnicity, gender, national origin, disability); they must accept all students who apply, and whom they have seats for, regardless of students’ ability or income.

How are charter schools different from other public schools?

- Charter schools operate independently because they are governed by not-for-profit board of trustees. These boards are held accountable for ensuring that schools meet or exceed all academic and operational goals established in their charters.
- Charter schools must undergo annual reviews and audits of finances and management by their authorizers.
- Charter schools are held strictly accountable by their authorizers for meeting academic goals. Schools that fail to do so risk losing their charters to operate.
- Charter schools set their own discipline codes, some of which are strict.

What are the potential benefits of enrolling my child in a charter school?

Charter schools provide an additional public educational option and may offer the kind of learning environment that works for you and your child. Because each charter school is independent, it is difficult to generalize about schools’ curricula and teaching philosophies. However, here are some charter school characteristics that may help you decide whether a charter school would be a good fit for your child:

- Many charter schools hold longer school days and a longer school year; some even provide school on Saturdays. This allows them to spend extra time making sure that students understand important concepts.
- Charter schools tend to have low student-teacher ratios, offering personal attention for your child.
- Most charter schools focus on preparing their students for the rigors of higher education and college.

Do charter schools serve Special Education students and English Language Learners (ELLs)?

Yes. Charter schools must serve students who are learning English as a second language and those with learning, behavioral, or physical disabilities. While every school must provide supports and programs for English Language Learners, a charter school may choose the type of programs it provides, which may include structured immersion, bilingual, or dual-language programs. Parents of special education students should inquire into the range of services that a particular charter school provides.

What kind of transportation services do charter schools provide?

Transportation services, such as yellow school bus service, vary depending on the school. Students may also be eligible for full or partial MTA metro cards. Parents should contact a specific school for more information.

Do charter schools have small class sizes?

Most charter elementary schools have class sizes that range from 18 to 26 students per class. Charter middle and high schools tend to have larger class sizes, ranging from 22 to 29 students.

Getting into a Public Charter School

If your child qualifies for admission to a New York City public school, he or she also qualifies for admission to a public charter school. Your child must be:

- A resident of New York City;
- Five years old by December 31st of the year he or she first enrolls, if enrolling in Kindergarten; or according to the individual school's policy.
- Under 21 years old and cannot have received a high school diploma.

Every charter school has its own individual application and lottery. It is your right to apply to as many charter schools as you want. Contact each school individually to learn more about application procedures and deadlines. To find out charter school locations and contact information, consult the index in the back of this guide or visit www.nycchartercenter.org/locations.asp.

Admission Preferences

Every charter school is required to give preference in admission to children residing in the community school district (CSD) in which the school is located. In addition, siblings of students who are already enrolled are also given preference. Charter schools may also give a preference for students at risk of academic failure. Because poverty is very strongly associated with academic failure, some charter schools give a preference to students who are eligible for free or reduced lunch; for the same reason, a number of charter schools set aside seats for those students whose test scores demonstrate that they are struggling to succeed.

The Application

Application rules, procedures, and deadlines for charter schools vary. Most charter schools applications are available starting January for the upcoming school year. You should contact each school individually by phone or in person to obtain an application. Many schools also post applications on their Web sites.

While filling out an application, parents are not required to give information about their child's special education needs or whether he or she is an English Language Learner. Once a child has been accepted into a charter school, parents can expect questions from school officials that help them evaluate the student's needs.

Open Houses

Most charter schools offer “open houses” in advance of the application period and lottery. Open houses, which are normally publicized on school Web sites, allow parents to tour a school, talk with staff, and learn more about the curriculum and programs offered by the school. Contact schools directly to determine their particular visiting policies.

The Lottery

In the event that the number of school applications exceeds the number of seats available in a specific grade, a charter school is required to hold a lottery or other random selection process. Most schools conduct admissions lotteries during the second week of April. During a lottery, charter schools randomly draw student names until all seats are filled. Once all the seats are filled, students who are not accepted are added to a waiting list in the order their names are drawn. Parents are notified if their child has been admitted, or they are informed of the student’s place on the waiting list. To ensure impartiality, charter schools sometimes invite public officials to oversee lotteries, or hire an auditing firm or outside legal entity to conduct the lottery.

Enrollment

After your child has been accepted, the charter school will send you any forms you need to fill out in order to complete the registration process. If your child is currently enrolled in another school, you must notify your child’s old school that you will be transferring him or her to a charter school. Some necessary documents for registration include your child’s birth certificate or passport; immunization records; and proof of address. Please keep in mind that enrollment procedures may vary among charter schools.

How are charter schools funded?

Each NYC charter school receives both state and local funding administered by the NYCDOE. In addition to a per pupil allocation, Charters may receive state and federal grants, and they can raise funds from private sources as well. Charter schools do not receive any City, state, or federal funding for school buildings or facilities.

Visiting a Charter School

Even before reviewing test performance or other academic indicators, you should first take the time to understand a particular school’s philosophy and culture. There is no substitute for visiting a school. By talking with students, principals, teachers and parents, and asking questions about everything from academic goals to discipline policies, parents can make an informed decision about whether a school will be a good fit for their child.

Some questions you might ask are:

1. What innovative or exciting features does the school have?
2. How are art, music and extracurricular activities part of the school day?
3. What organizations collaborate with the school?
4. How much time is allotted to each subject?
5. What strategies do you use to help children who are not performing on grade level?
6. How long are the school day and the school year?
7. How are children assessed, and how is their progress measured?
8. What are the latest test scores on the statewide examinations in English and math?
9. What type of transportation services, if any, does the school provide?
10. How can parents become involved in school decision-making?
11. What is the role of the board of trustees, and how can a parent contact board members?
12. What is the school’s discipline policy?
13. Does the charter school share space with another school or organization, and if so, what is the interaction with the other school like?
14. Does the school offer an after-school program?
15. What types of resources are available to English Language Learners and students with special needs?

16. (For elementary schools) Where do your students go to middle school?
17. (For middle schools) Where do your students go to high school?
18. (For high schools) How many 9th graders graduate? How many go to college?
19. May I speak with 2-3 parents in the school?
20. May I observe a classroom?
21. How much time do students typically spend on homework?

Charter Schools in New York City

How do charter schools open?

By law, there are three distinct governmental entities, or “authorizers,” that may approve the creation of charter schools in New York City: The New York State Education Department (SED), on behalf of the New York State Board of Regents; The Charter Schools Institute, on behalf of the State University of New York (SUNY) Board of Trustees; and the NYC Department of Education’s Charter School Office, on behalf of the Chancellor.

Applying for a charter is a lengthy, detailed, and challenging process. Authorizers conduct a rigorous and thorough review of each applicant school. Applicants must explain in detail why the charter school is being created, who its primary students will be, where the school will be located, what it hopes to accomplish academically, and how it will accomplish these goals. Additionally, applicants must demonstrate the capacity to manage their schools efficiently, prepare for growth and expansion, and raise any necessary supplemental funding to support ongoing school operations.

What government agency regulates NYC charter schools?

The Board of Regents and the State Education Department (SED) provide oversight of charter schools. Additionally, charter-authorizing entities (the NYC DOE and SUNY) have the authority to oversee a school’s academic, operational and financial records. Charter schools also receive the following:

- Annual oversight and compliance visits by SED;
- Annual mandatory School Report Cards; and
- Independent audits by a Certified Public Accountant.

NOTE: To find individual charter school Progress Reports, annual School Report Cards, Annual Reports and test score results online, please visit <http://www.schools.nyc.gov/>.

Who has authority to close a NYC charter school?

During its annual review, an authorizer can choose not to renew a charter or to place a school on probation for a number of reasons, including failure to meet academic goals established in its charter or poor financial management. Since the first NYC charter school opened in 1999, there has been one charter school closure (2001), one charter school non-renewal (2004), and one voluntary charter school closure (2006). Also, across the state, eight other charter schools either have been closed or have not been renewed by their authorizers. (Source: New York Charter Schools Association)

Are all charter school teachers required to be certified?

No. Each New York charter school is permitted to hire a very small number of uncertified teachers (no more than 30 percent of its total teaching staff or five teachers, whichever number is less) who, for the most part, have prior teaching experience but have not yet completed the requirements for teacher certification. The law also permits charter school teachers who are certified in one area to teach in another subject area or level as long as they can demonstrate that they are “highly qualified” for each teaching assignment. In New York, a highly qualified teacher must: a) have a bachelor’s degree or higher; b) be deemed fit for the teaching assignment; and c) demonstrate subject matter competency for the subject. The Charter Center helps charter school teachers meet certification requirements, maintain or extend valid certification, or obtain the applicable teaching certificate.

What are the high school and college graduation rates for NYC charter schools?

Currently, there are very few charter high schools. Therefore, little data is available on graduation and college acceptance rates. If you are looking for a high school, you can find any available graduation rates at <http://nyc.gov/schools/Accountability/DOEData/GraduationDropoutReports>.

How many charter schools share space with other schools?

More than seventy of the City's charter schools currently share space with other schools in DOE buildings. In shared buildings (also known as campuses), schools and/or programs sharing space will each occupy one or more floors and share a cafeteria or gymnasium. For the most part, space-sharing arrangements among schools and/or programs are cooperative and offer an opportunity for co-existing schools to share best practices and collaborate on programs. For more information, ask an individual school about its campus culture and about the interaction among students and staff in different schools.

What is expected of parents of charter school students?

Many charter schools emphasize parent engagement and participation. In fact, expectations for student, parent, and teacher participation are often outlined in a school's application. This may include standards for dress, behavior, and involvement in school activities. In fact, it is not uncommon for a charter school to ask parents to read and sign a contract describing these standards and expectations.

Charter schools also recruit parents to serve on their boards, play an active role in school governance, and support fundraising efforts. Some schools have Parent Advisory Councils that allow parents to offer feedback on school policies and decisions. Other schools have created Parent Coordinator positions within the school structure to ensure regular, proactive communications with parents.

THE ETHICAL COMMUNITY CHARTER SCHOOL (TECCS)

The Ethical Community Charter School offers a safe and caring community where ethics, service, and social justice are the principles that inform every aspect of school life. Teachers lead and collaborate with students in a culture of rigorous academics and mutual respect, where analytical thinking and creativity are prized over learning by repetition. Our school teaches children to become individuals of integrity, insight, autonomy - and socially productive citizens, workers, leaders. The parent community is very active in providing social events for families, parent education and service opportunities. The greater the participation of the parents, the greater potential for the success of their children.

JOHN V. LINDSAY WILDCAT ACADEMY CHARTER SCHOOL

John V. Lindsay Wildcat is a ungraded, year-round school targeting those students 16-21 years of age who have either dropped out of school or are at risk of academic failure. Classes run from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with students attending classes for one week and then working in the community on internships the next week. New 9th and 10th grade students attend classes full-time for the first semester. The average student at Wildcat is older and has fewer credits compared to those students in a traditional high school.

THE EQUITY PROJECT CHARTER SCHOOL (TEP)

The school’s name – The Equity Project – emerges from the dual meaning of the word equity. Equity means the value of an investment. TEP is particularly interested in teacher equity, the value of teachers in student achievement. Equity also means fairness and equality. TEP is focused on providing students from low-income families with equal access to outstanding teachers as a means of achieving educational equity. In addition to the core subjects, TEP students will study Latin and Music and participate in the mandatory extended school day program.

GROWING UP GREEN CHARTER SCHOOL

Growing Up Green Charter School opened in 2009 with grades kindergarten and first, and will eventually serve grades kindergarten through fifth grade. Growing Up Green Charter School aims to provide an education of the highest academic rigor through a rich, interdisciplinary context that emphasizes sustainability and green, healthy living. This school teaches its students about sustainability by offering organic cotton student uniforms, non-toxic paints for student use and on walls, utilizing recycled and re-used classroom furniture and providing healthy, organic food options for lunch and snacks. GUGCS has a partnership with Solar One, a green education organization. They will lead the staff in professional development of effective green practices, as well as reach out to parents at monthly parent meetings, so green principles connect from school to home. Solar One will also be a crucial part of GUGCS' "ED" time, working with the Science Coordinator and Classroom Teachers to design interdisciplinary projects that meet NYS Standards while still incorporating themes of sustainability

THE RENAISSANCE CHARTER SCHOOL

Our school's motto of "Developing Leaders for the Renaissance of New York" is evident in everything we do. The Renaissance Charter School offers a stimulating, K through 12, college preparatory program in a small, family-like atmosphere. We use a three-tiered model: Core Curriculum, Project-Based Learning and Community Service. Our students study, in addition to traditional subjects, dance, drama, music, arts and foreign language. Collaboration, cooperation and communication are core values for students, parents and staff alike. We view each young person individually and value diversity.

ACADEMIC LEADERSHIP CHARTER SCHOOL

Through a commitment to broad-based education for all students — ranging from the basics of reading and mathematics to fine arts and technology — we will teach the next generation of community leaders. To complete our mission, ALCS will depend on the full commitment of our students, their parents, our teachers, and the administration. With this teamwork, our school will provide a better future for our students, as individuals and as leaders in the community.

BRONX CHARTER FOR BETTER LEARNING

The Bronx Charter School for Better Learning employs a pedagogy called the Subordination of Teaching to Learning, which was developed by Dr. Caleb Gattegno (1911-1988). This teaching methodology creates an atmosphere where each child's innate ability to learn is nurtured, protected and directed toward mastering all traditional subjects. The basic principle is that encouraging children's innate curiosity and intelligence through multi-sensory approaches to learning will lead to academic excellence for all young people.
