

The “YouCanGo!” website – available now at <http://YCG.org> – is a free resource to inspire lower-resourced students who want to go to college but feel it’s not an option for them.

As a tool for high school students, and the counselors and educators who support them, YouCanGo! is an engaging, interactive website for students who need extra inspiration, basic facts and simple guidance to realize that they have college options just by graduating high school. YouCanGo! delivers this practical information through interactive tools and content, centered around real-life videos and success stories from young people who have overcome obstacles to make their college dreams come true.

For Counselors and Educators:

- YouCanGo! is a free resource to add to your guidance toolkit, specifically for working with lower-resourced students
- The site can be used to inspire students who want to go to college but feel it’s not an option for them
- The site provides access to a video collection of real student stories, reflecting diverse backgrounds and challenges (like you may see in your school)

For Students, the site provides:

- Access to engaging student videos that shows students they’re not alone
- Expert advice provided through the lens of other students, busting myths about college costs and admissibility
- An interactive tool that shows students that they have college options just by graduating high school, with more options available if they work harder
- Practical and simple starting points to the college planning process
- Integration with Facebook for sharing site content, and making a “College Pledge” to your peers and family

You can visit and use YouCanGo! now, at <http://YCG.org>. In the near future, look for supporting offline materials, including an interactive site tour that can be used during student or parent presentations.
